Dear Harold,

I feel extremely guilty that I have not replied to your previous letters. The pressures on me since I returned from the United States have been such that it has been impossible for me to give any consideration to your material and how to sell some sort of project or idea within the Sunday Times. I had to finish researching and writing 10,000 words on childbirth, which was rapidly followed by 5,000 words on Nixon and the Will to Live (article enclosed), as well as writing news stories. It was the research on the Will to Live that I was doing when we met in the summer, ~~which~~ it just so happens that Nixon was a convenient peg on which to hang the idea of the article. I hope it may be of some interest to you. I am returning the copy of the Russell story and have kept a copy for records.

I am still hoping to get down to thinking about the Kennedy assassination. I have not forgotten the most rewarding time I had with you, and will write at greater length before too long, I hope.

Yours sincerely,

Oliver
